

Mental Health

Mental health is about how we think, feel and behave. 1 in 4 people in the UK have a mental health problem which affects their normal daily life, relationships or physical health. Read on for more information or use the links below to jump to the section you need:

Looking after your mental health and wellbeing

Life can be busy and chaotic. It's important to look after your health mentally, physically and emotionally to be able to enjoy life and to help you cope when times are hard. There are many ways you can take time for yourself and develop your 'emotional resilience' including:

Talking to others about your feelings: being connected to people helps. Call a friend, family member, a telephone helpline or visit a local support group. Ask for help from your GP when you need it. Attend a counselling session. Find local organisations on the right hand of this page.

Practising mindfulness: to help you to pay attention to your thoughts, sensations and feelings in a non-judgemental way. Mindfulness is the opposite of being on autopilot and enables you to take control of your mind rather than allowing your mind to be in control of you.

Keeping your brain active: helps to keep your memory in shape and boost your happiness levels.

Being active: exercising helps to boost your natural happiness hormones. It's also a way to connect with new people.

Gardening and nature: are good for calming and soothing the mind.

Try something new or something you enjoy: taking part in an activity you enjoy will help boost your confidence. Or learn some new skills and try a new hobby.

Take some time for yourself: take a break if you need it, a change of scenery, listen to some music, read a book or you could try a complementary therapies

Eat and drink sensibly: in times of stress or upset we may turn to the food or drink to comfort us or try to change how we feel. Your mind and body need a balanced diet to work well.

Try relaxation techniques: listen to these free guides can or read the free mental health guides

Take care of other worries that you have: they drain you of your energy and wellbeing. Local support is available to help with money or debt worries, addictions, looking for work, threat of homelessness, family or relationship problems, and being a carer.

Symptoms of poor mental health

There are a wide range of mental health symptoms. They can affect anyone, regardless of age, race, gender or social background.

Symptoms can include:

- feeling sad, anxious, angry or irritable
- losing interest or enjoyment in things
- crying a lot or unable to cry
- feeling lonely even in company
- worrying a lot about your health despite reassurance from a GP
- uncontrollable and unhealthy eating habits
- poor sleeping pattern
- social anxiety, low self-esteem, as well as low mood, often related to significant life events including bereavement and loss, loss of employment or inability to participate in meaningful activity.

Without care and treatment, mental health symptoms can have a serious effect on you and the people around you. There are many ways to look after your mental health.

Causes of mental health problems

There is no single cause of mental health problems but symptoms are listed above. The reasons they develop are as complex as the individual. Sometimes people with mental health problems are discriminated against which can lead to social problems such as homelessness and may make the mental health problem worse.

Mental health problems are more common in for people:

- living in poor living conditions
- from ethnic minorities
- with a health problem such as, long term medical condition or sudden onset condition, alcohol and drug abuse, addictions, insomnia
- unable to participate in their community or activities
- who are homeless
- in the criminal justice system or ex offenders
- conflicting demands of work and home, of ageing parents and growing children
- high levels of job stress
- struggling to cope with emotions
- financial difficulties – debt and paying bills

Mental health problems can develop after difficult life events, such as moving house, losing your job or a death of someone special. Drinking too much alcohol over a long period of time and using illegal drugs can add to mental health problems, particularly in people who are already vulnerable.

Some mental health problems are more common for certain people. For example, women's happiness and wellbeing can dip between the ages of 46 and 55 years. Drug and alcohol addictions are more common in men and they're more likely to commit suicide.

What to do in a mental health crisis or emergency

A mental health crisis can mean different things to different people. Crises cause a significant disruption to your life and your ability to function. You may have an existing problem that suddenly gets much worse or you might experience a psychiatric problem owing to major life events, such as, an accident, bereavement or marriage break up.

If you are in distress, need immediate help and are unable to see a GP, you can call:

- CNTW Crisis Resolution at home team NHS \(CRHT\) available 24 hours a day 7 days a week. They offer assessment and home treatment as an alternative to hospital admission, for people over 16 experiencing a mental health crisis
- Community Health and Social Care Direct Emergency Duty Team \(EDT\) for advice, safeguarding and emergency support
- NHS 111 is staffed by clinicians and call handlers. NHS 111 can transfer you to 999 if it's an emergency
- Northumbria Police can be contacted if someone is in immediate danger

Read our 24 hour support mental health article. You may find it useful to talk to someone you trust or one of the organisations below.

Treatment for mental health problems

When experiencing mental health problems you should seek the advice and support of your GP.

It's important that you know about the options available, so you can make a decision about what treatment suits best. There are many treatment options including:

- medication is used to treat conditions such as schizophrenia, depression, bipolar disorder, anxiety disorders, and attention deficit-hyperactivity disorder (ADHD). Sometimes medications are used alongside talking therapies
- counselling and cognitive behaviour therapy (CBT) a type of talking therapy that allows a person to talk about their problems and feelings in a confidential environment and encourages you to take positive steps
- psychotherapy usually involves talking to a trained therapist or specialist, either one-to-one, in a group or with your partner
- complementary therapies treatments that fall outside mainstream healthcare. These treatments range from acupuncture and homeopathy to aromatherapy, meditation and colonic irrigation.

- self help strategies: download these free mental health self help guides and use this Wellbeing and Mental Health guide during the coronavirus
- debt advice putting plans in place to manage your debt or when struggling to pay bills may help

People with mental health problems need help and support to cope. An important step in the recovery process is for the person to accept they are ill and want to get better. This can take time. It's important for family and friends to be supportive.

Mental Health Social Work Team at Newcastle City Council helps adults with a mental health diagnosis who receive secondary care (for example, people who have a community psychiatrist) and their carers. They can give information and help plan support. If you are a relative of someone who needs an urgent mental health assessment you should tell the person's GP or Community Mental Health Team. You may have rights as the person's 'Nearest Relative' to ask for an assessment under the Mental Health Act. Call them for advice.

Types of mental health problems

Mental health disorders take many different forms and affect people in different ways. Schizophrenia, depression and personality disorders are all types of mental health problem. Diseases such as Alzheimer's and dementia generally develop in old age, whereas eating disorders are more common in young people. You may find it useful to read our articles on some specific conditions:

Advocacy – help to get your voice heard

Independent Mental Health Advocates (IMHA) can support someone who is subject to the Mental Health Act, (This may also be known as detained or 'sectioned' under the Act).

- help patients understand information they are given by people involved in their care/treatment
- help them to talk to the people involved in their care/treatment
- access information about how the Mental Health Act applies to patient

Connected Voice Advocacy can provide practical support to deal with stress and anxiety that may be caused by not being able to access services or support you need.

Mental Health and the Equality Act

Disability has a special legal meaning under the Equality Act 2010. A person is considered to be disabled if they have a physical or mental impairment which has a 'substantial and long-term effect on their ability to carry out normal day-to-day activities'.

Substantial means a large and important effect on your daily life and long-term means if its lasted or is likely to last for at least 12 months or more.

This means that if you have a mental health problem the equality Act may protect you from discrimination, as the definition of disability is focused on how the mental health problem has an impact on your daily life.
